The light that Filippo Cannata reserves to workspaces is a light extremely attentive to the welfare of people who use these spaces, a light that places the 'man' at the center of each project. A natural light that merges with the artificial one into a sweet hug, pleasant and welcoming tones of light sources that are hidden from view, a moderate and flexible intensity that interprets the volumes, gives form and color to the cut of the spaces, especially adapts to different light requirements related to specific tasks, these are the elements of each intervention which is always realized with the maximum participation of architecture, sustainable technology and design. The lighting, though aimed at satisfying basic human needs such as good visibility and sense of security that have a positive effect on levels of productivity and performance, is designed with an approach that goes beyond the fruitive aspect, because the well-being that this light is able to inspire is not only functional to the view, but involves all senses until to lead the user in a state of total contentment.
